Making Observations

Although scientists use all of their five senses to make observations, sight is probably the sense that gives them the most information. Scientists can make either quantitative or qualitative observations.

What is a qualitative observation?

_____

_____

What is a quantitative observation?

_____

_____

State whether the following examples are qualitative or quantitative observations:

The taste of food

_____

The distance between home and school

_____

The mass of your textbook

_____

The temperature outside in degrees

_____

Time taken to run 100m

_____

The colour of petals on a flower

_____

The sound a bird makes

_____

The feel of the temperature outside

_____

